

*Note: permits are required for overnight camping.
No water may be available on the trail.*

Mt. Margaret

11 miles total, 2,300' gained

From the Norway Pass trailhead, find the trail adjacent to the toilets (a water pump is also present). This is the Boundary Trail #1. Almost immediately there is a junction; stay straight ahead. After a mile, pass by #227A.

A little over a mile further is Norway Pass, and also the junction with #227.

Continue straight ahead for an additional mile to the junction with #211. Stay to the left, heading west, on #1 (Bear Pass is on #211, just above this junction point).

Continue on for about two miles more, reaching the junction with #214. Go straight ahead.

In a bit less than a mile, Mt. St. Helens will come back into view as you round a small ridge. Look for a spur trail on the right (#1F, signed 'Mt. Margaret') which goes less than ¼ mile up Mt. Margaret.

Return the way you came.

Note: you can also reach Mt. Margaret from the Johnston Ridge Observatory starting point. The drive is likely shorter, but the hiking distance longer, at 17 miles. See the 'Coldwater Peak, Harry's Ridge' page for more details.

