

Whittier Ridge, Lakes loop

14 ½ miles total, 3,500' gained

Note: permits are required for overnight camping.
No water may be available until reaching the lakes.

From the Norway Pass trailhead, find the trail adjacent to the toilets (a water pump is also present). This is the Boundary Trail #1. Almost immediately there is a junction; stay straight ahead.

After a mile, pass by #227A.

A little over a mile further is Norway Pass, and also the junction with #227.

Continue straight ahead for almost an additional mile to the junction with #211. Stay to the left, heading west, on #1 (Bear Pass is on #211, just above this junction point, which is the return).

Continue on #1 for a bit less than two miles more, reaching the junction with #214. Turn right.

#214 is about two miles in length, but allow at least a couple hours to complete this stretch. Generally, follow the ridge top until the descent to #211 begins. Route-finding and scrambling required. See topo map. At the junction with #211, go right.

Follow #211 past several lakes for about five miles to Bear Pass. Descend a very short distance to the junction with #1, and follow the Boundary Trail back the way you came from this point.
